JUNE 2006

SPARKS' PERSPECTIVE

*Ron Sparks
Commissioner*

Avian influenza, or AI, has remained a consistent topic in the news over the past 6 months as cases are reported around the world. With Alabama being a poultry state, it remains an important issue to both producers and consumers. I hope that the information the Alabama Department of Agriculture and Industries has been providing you during this time has helped you understand the potential risks of the virus, but also the realities of it. AI is still an animal health issue with potential human concerns. The human deaths that have occurred have been the result of close contact with infected birds, mainly through their local poultry houses.

I want to be sure to explain the difference between the high pathogenic and low pathogenic AI virus. Low path is a less contagious version of the bird flu found in poultry that causes mild respiratory symptoms and low egg production. High path is more severe because it is more contagious and has a higher mortality rate. There have been low-path cases in the US, which are currently treated the same way as a high path case to be safe.

It is important for consumers to know that poultry is safe to eat. The bird flu virus is very vulnerable. Mild disinfectants and cooking both kill the AI virus. You should practice safe food handling measures just as you have in the past. Wash your hands after handling poultry and always cook poultry to an internal temperature of 160 degrees.

The Department has been testing flock for AI since 1980. In previous years, we normally test about 50,000 birds. This year we will test 200,000 birds. We will also be working closely with federal and state wildlife agencies to test wild birds that exhibit symptoms of being infected.

We have a plan in place if AI is found in Alabama. The Department has rapid response teams that are prepared should there be a case of AI in Alabama. Our animal industries staff is trained, equipment and supplies are ready to be transported, and we have made contacts in every county so that we can know what our outside resources are. We also work very closely with the Alabama Department of Public Health to stay prepared in case the virus evolves and can transfer from person to person.

Bio-security continues to be an important issue to the agricultural industry. In the US, the poultry industry takes strict measures to protect their workers, the public, and the food supply. Not only do they do the simple things that make a big difference such as entry site foot baths, farmers and producers in Alabama are now using GPS systems and premises ID registration to track and protect their flocks. Birds are raised in an indoor environment, protected from inclement weather and airborne disease, wild migratory birds, and receive good nutrition. Also, millions of dollars have been spent on two state of the art diagnostic labs. Construction on a third lab will begin very soon.

The Alabama Department of Agriculture & Industries held a dedication ceremony for the new Thompson-Bishop-Sparks State Diagnostic Lab at Auburn University on May 9, 2006. It is named for Agriculture & Industries Commissioners Jack Thompson, Charles Bishop, and Ron Sparks. Each of them served as Commissioner through the years the project was being developed.

The state-of-the-art lab located at 890 Simms Drive in Auburn lab is approximately 55,000 square foot and cost about $14 million to build. Funding was provided through the combined assistance of the Alabama Department of Agriculture and Industries, Alabama Cattlemen's Association, Alabama Poultry and Egg Association, Alabama Farmers Federation, Alabama Forestry Association, Auburn University, Tuskegee University, Alabama A&M University, and the people of Alabama who approved the funding of the bond issue for the project.

"This diagnostic lab is the result of the hard work and innovation of many people over the past twelve years," said Commissioner Ron Sparks. "I am proud to be a part of such an important project. This lab means that we can continue to raise our standard of knowledge about animal health and disease prevention in Alabama."

Product Spotlight

This month we are proud to feature Mrs. Stratton's Salads as our Alabama company for June. Mrs. Stratton and her husband J.J. began selling her famous chicken, tuna and pimento cheese salads in Birmingham in the 1950's, and they quickly became a hit in local grocery stores. By the 1970's, the Stratton family sold their company to a food brokerage company in Birmingham owned by Tom Bradford, Jr. and his brother John.

Starting with only 5 routes in Alabama in 1972, the company has grown significantly over the past 30 years and is a top Alabama company today.

In addition to its traditional lines of fresh prepared wet salads, the company now produces a premium line of upscale salads, cheese dips, barbeque sauces and salad toppings. Mrs. Stratton's Salads can be purchased in most major grocery chains including WalMart, Winn

Dixie, Bruno's, Kroger, Publix, Piggly Wiggly, and Western Supermarkets.

Mrs. Stratton's also prides itself as a community leader by actively contributing to a number of worthy causes including the Dallas Theological Seminary, the Helen Keller Foundation, JH Ranch, United Way Food Bank and Young Life.

Mrs. Stratton's Salads is located in Birmingham, Alabama and the variety of products they offer can be viewed on their website at www.mrsstrattons.com.

Funding Provided by Department of Homeland Security

Commissioner Sparks and Alabama's Department of Homeland Security Director Jim Walker are pictured at the Thompson - Bishop - Sparks Diagnostic Laboratory in Auburn. The Department of Agriculture & Industries received a grant from DHS that provided important equipment for the diagnostic lab including: a video surveillance and security system, a video conferencing system, an equipment sterilizer, and generators. The grant also provided funding for decontamination trailers, emergency response trailers, and satellite communications.

Alabama Farmers & Producers Have Exemption for Vehicle Registration

Agriculture & Industries Commissioner Ron Sparks recently thanked Governor Bob Riley for allowing an exemption from additional commercial vehicle registration requirements for Alabama farmers and producers. The proposed requirements by the Alabama Department of Public Safety would have meant that vehicles in agricultural use by farmers and producers hauling their own products would have to register as a commercial vehicle just like interstate haulers. Governor Riley has clarified that the additional registration will not be required of farmers and producers who haul their own livestock or produce within 150 miles of their home or farm as long as they do not also haul for hire.

"I appreciate Governor Riley making sure farmers and producers know that they are exempt from the Department of Public Safety's new requirements for commercial vehicles," said Sparks. "We had many calls to the Department of Agriculture about this issue from concerned farmers who haul their own products. It is important that they know they are being treated fairly and are not subject to the same requirements as vehicles for hire or those for interstate transport."

In 1987, federal regulations were adopted by the State of Alabama as part of the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations.

These regulations require any truck with a gross vehicle rating or a gross combined weight rating of more than 10,000 lbs. used commercially on state highways to be registered as commercial vehicles with visible registration numbers and the name of the business posted on the vehicle.

In the past, these regulations for intrastate carriers have not been enforced by the state. The Alabama Department of Public Safety sent out a notice that stated as of July 1, 2006 all commercial interstate and intrastate carriers must be in compliance with federal regulations. The recipients of the notice included many farmers and producers throughout the state.

Did You Know?

- Cows eat about 90 lbs. of nutritious food a day. 90 lbs. of food equals: 480 hamburgers or 206 baked potatoes or 1440 slices of bread. Cows drink 25-50 gallons of water each day. That's nearly a bathtub full.
- What a cow eats affects how much milk she makes. A cow that eats only grass can make about 50 glasses of milk a day. A cow that eats grass, corn, hay and mixed feed can make about 100 glasses of milk a day. Using several milking machines, farmers can milk about 100 cows an hour. If you milked cows by hand, you could milk about 6 cows an hour.
- Milk is one of the safest foods you can eat. In the dairy it is never touched by human hands. That is why milk stays very pure and fresh-tasting. In 1884, dairy plants started using glass bottles to store milk. Before that time they used jars, pails and cans. In 1906, the first paper milk carton was used. In 1964, plastic milk jugs were introduced.
- Long ago, when people traveled and wanted milk, they had to take cows with them. When Pilgrims came to America, they brought cows with them. Nowadays, milk is delivered to stores, schools and even to homes. The milk delivered today was in a cow 2 days ago.
